

Designer babies

Discussion

Imagine that before you were born your parents had 'designed' you. If you had been them, what would you have changed? Think about these questions:

Which one aspect of your appearance would you change?

Which one aspect of your character/personality would you change?

How do you think your life might have been different?

Are you pleased your parents did not design you or do you wish they had?

Compare your answers in pairs or small groups.

Reading

Read through the article and answer this question:

Why do the Jones want a baby girl?

NEW LAWS MAY ALLOW CHOICE OF BABY'S SEX

Jim and Debbie Jones (not their real names), whose daughter was killed in a tragic domestic accident last year, plan to use the new British human rights laws to win the legal right to choose the sex of their baby.

The Jones, who have four sons, say that the 'female dimension' has disappeared from their family since the death of Jasmine. "Words cannot describe what it feels like to lose the little girl we had wanted for so long. We know another girl won't replace Jasmine, but we want the chance to try," said Jim Jones. "What we're hoping to do with the use of technology is create the female dimension again. We have psychologists' reports and doctors' reports which confirm that our reasons for wanting a girl go beyond just wanting to replace her. Our family doesn't feel complete any more. I adore our sons but we would like another girl."

Gender selection is only possible in Britain for medical rather than social, psychological or physical reasons. Pro-life campaigners say that if the Jones are allowed to choose the sex of their baby, it could lead to babies becoming consumer items. A spokesman said: "We are totally opposed to engineering the numbers and genders of people in society. That leads only to disaster."

The Jones' lawyers will be basing their arguments on new human rights legislation. Article six guarantees everyone a 'fair hearing' from public authorities and Article eight protects the right of everyone to 'respect for family life'.

Read the article again. Mark the following sentences true (T) or false (F):

1. The Jones feel they need a baby girl to make their family complete again.
2. At the moment in Britain it is not possible to choose the sex of your baby.
3. New laws on human rights may allow the Jones to choose the sex of their baby.

Discussion

Discuss this question in pairs or small groups:

Do you think the Jones should be allowed to choose to have a baby girl? Why? Why not?